White satin fashioned the brides floor length gown which was styled with a fitted bodice featuring a sweetheart neckline and long fitted sleeves. The Tourist Industry

WITH THE LIFTING OF wartime restrictions on the various forms of travel, tourist traffic has again become a source of considerable revenue to communities both in the United States and Canada. In 1946, 21,100,000 tourists visited Canada and they brought $221,000,000 into this country. This was the largest number of holiday visitors to come here since the late 1920's. In 1929, the year in which the pre-war record for tourists was set, money brought into the country in this way amounted to $184,000,000. The poorest year for tourist trade in Canada was 1942, when the revenue was estimated at $82,000,000, only about one-third of the figure for 1946. It is reasonable to expect that an all-time record for tourist traffic may be made this year since facilities for transportation have improved considerably in the past year.

Highways Have Been Improved

In view of the amount of revenue which tourist traffic brings to a country, the term "tourist industry" has come into use, and the many services required by the thousands of holiday visitors do indeed reach the proportions of a large and profitable industry. With its many lakes, rivers, forests, and attractive national parks, Canada is an inviting land to the thousands of vacationists who come here each year. Now that their numbers are steadily increasing, it would seem wise if every effort were made to improve facilities for tourists and to build up this very profitable industry. Constant improvements have been made in highways in Canada in the last twenty years, and in some parts of the country highway facilities compare favourably with those to be found anywhere.

Natural Beauty Of The Prairies

Prairie Provinces. Naturally those parts of Canada, with the greater wealth of large lakes, forests and rivers, attracted great numbers of vacationists, but the beauty spots of the West and especially the very fine national parks which have been developed on the Prairies will, as time goes on, bring larger numbers of tourists to this part of the country. With them will come increasing revenue to merchants and others in businesses patronized by holiday visitors. Good roads, and fine facilities for accommodation and recreation will prove valuable assets both to visitors from other parts of Canada and to the many who come here from the United States. The tourist industry is one which still has great potentialities for enterprising Canadians, and there is no reason why the Prairie Provinces should not benefit extensively from it.

FARM FAMILY LIVING ON THE PRAIRIES

One-fifth of the rural people in Canada are in the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan. The story of their rapid settlement, particularly in the first decade of the present century, when the population increased over 400 per cent., is a story of novelty, excitement, enterprise, and endurance. Now, writes Florence M. Edwards in "Farm Family Living in the Prairie Provinces", the story is merging into a more sober tale: one of struggle for stability, for security on the farm, for a reasonable standard of living.

In order to obtain first-hand information on such questions as what have the rural families achieved in their short history of settlement; what kind of living is provided by farms in various kinds of farming regions; is housing adequate; what of community facilities; how much do prairie families spend for a living; how do they spend it, and so on, more than 620 prairie housewives were interviewed and farm homes in three contrasting farm regions, in Central Alberta, and in Central and Northern Saskatchewan, were visited during 1942 and 1943.

Miss Edwards, who was formerly Agricultural Economist with the Dominion Department of Agriculture, has collated and co-ordinated the information given in the Dominion Department of Agriculture Publication, No. 787, "Farm Family Living in the Prairie Provinces", a copy of which may be obtained on request from the Dominion Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

South Americans Pay High For Cars

A fast-growing new fraternity of automobile exporters is cleaning up these days.

They pay "going" premium prices for new cars. These range from $300 above list prices for a Ford to as much as $1,000 for a Cadillac. Abroad, the cars bring fantastic prices. Some examples:

Brazilians are offering $4,200 for a Ford; in Shanghai, $5,000 is a typical price for a new Ford or Plymouth. Venezuelans are glad to pay $5,000 for a new Buick; the flush Brazilians are bidding from $8,000 to $9,000 for Cadillacs.

The exporters, many of them fresh from successful operation of used car lots, got into the export business when the government lifted restrictions March 31 on shipment abroad of new and used American cars. Helping to boom their business is the fact that auto manufacturers are making limited shipments overseas. —Wall Street Journal.

Wire Staple Diet Fatal To Eagles

SEATTLE. — Seventeen Bald Eagles, secured in Alaska and donated to the Woodland Park zoo several years ago, died recently from eating wire staples thrown into their cages, Dr. Gus Knudson, zoo director, reported. Knudson said he did not believe the staples were tossed in maliciously, but blamed children and unthinking adults.

"If the people were as well-behaved as the animals we wouldn't have so much trouble," he said.

Human muscles can absorb as much as 30 quarts of liquid.

VACATION TREND POINTS TO THE WEST

The vacation trend this year is definitely to the western United States and Canada, with the majority of travelers going by private motor. Tours by train are already well booked, and charter-plane trips are increasing. Travel officials say that it is too early to estimate the numbers that will go by the various carriers, but all units are being pressed into service for what all signs indicate will be the biggest domestic travel season to date. Rail lines say there is already evidence of a 15 per cent. increase over last year. —By Diana Rice in N.Y. Times.

Indiana Man Has Really New Idea

If there is any truth in that old saying about better mousetraps, the world should presently be beating a path to the door of H. L. Ratchford of Muncie, Ind., to get his electric one. It is a kind of miniature stall, with metallic contact plates on its floor and sides, a bait-holder at the end, and a cable to plug into the house circuit. When the mouse seeks the bait he comes in contact with the plates and is electrocuted. The last convulsive jerk of his muscles throws him out of the trap, leaving it ready for the next mouse. POTATO GROWERS ARE ASKED TO REPORT RING ROT

Growers of both seed and table stock potatoes are asked by the Dominion Department of Agriculture to instruct their seed cutters to watch carefully for any indications of bacterial ring rot-infected potatoes.

"If anything suspicious is encountered—such as internal discoloration just inside the tuber—send that tuber for examination to the nearest potato inspector or, better still, to the nearest Laboratory of Plant Pathology," recommends J. W. Scannell, assistant chief of the Department's Plant Protection Division.

"Better be sure", he says, "than to go along wondering whether that suspicious tuber did or did not contain ring rot."

The Control of Canada Thistle

Canada Thistle is a perennial weed that is spreading rapidly causing a greater loss to agriculture every year. This weed can be controlled but many farmers seem to have great difficulty in doing so.

The green or above ground parts of the thistle are used to manufacture food which in turn is stored in the root system of the plant. Experimental work has shown the food reserves in the roots of the thistle are lowest just as the plant comes into bloom. This is the weakest stage in the plant's life and thus an opportune time to start the eradication program.

In fields that are to be summerfallowed it is not practical to leave until the thistles bloom, due to the presence of other weeds. When this is the case it is advisable to begin cultivation early in the season.

If the eradication program is delayed until the plant is in the bloom stage it will be necessary to cut and burn the weeds where surface cultivation is to be used. Where the land is ploughed care should be taken to completely bury all plants, otherwise they will ripen and produce seed.

The cutting edges of all implements used must be sharp in order that all thistle plants are cut off cleanly. The duck foot cultivator and the rodweeder are very useful implements to use in the eradication program.

Cultivation should be often enough so that no green growth remains longer than six or seven days above the ground from the time of emergence.

The most common failure in eradicating thistle by the summerfallow method is neglect of the fallow field during and after harvest. Cultivation must be continued right through until freeze-up.

Farmers who have thistle patches in their grain fields would be well advised to cut these thistles in bloom stage and then cultivate at intervals till freeze-up.

MOST OF US DON'T KNOW

Hardly anyone—not even the publisher—knows how important a newspaper is to a community.

The smaller the town or village, the more important the newspaper is in its economic life. Its news, editorials and feature stories focus the interest of surrounding territory on the place in which the paper is published.

This force and the force of advertisements by local merchants build an ever-widening trade area. This means more business, more money for schools, homes and churches—a bigger and better town.

A town with a newspaper is a town with a future. The better the paper, the brighter the future.

It deserves the support of every business man in that town.

We are trying to make this paper worthy of our town. Your help and suggestions are appreciated.

A LITTLE DUBIOUS about this stuff called grass which his mother says is good to eat, a Clydesdale foal nuzzles it cautiously while mama eats avidly. The tank collapsed and in falling crushed two box cars and a flat car while it left a lake of water about two feet deep in the area.

CANTALOUPE PLANTS—In this field in the Queenswood district near Victoria, B.C., are 1,100 young cantaloupe plants, each protected by a paper cap which protects it from crows and speeds its growing. The field is on the property of W. E. Pickford. Besides protecting each plant with a paper cap, Mr. Pickford puts down building paper between the rows to keep down the weeds and to conserve moisture. Output of the 1,100 plants goes mainly to the domestic fresh fruit market in Victoria. The crop is expected to be ready for harvesting in August.

OUR COMPLETE SHORT STORY—

YOU NEVER KNOW

By HOWARD BECKLER

MIKE DEVLIN touched the air brakes and pulled the big truck to a grinding stop. That lousy light had changed to red without any warning. The rain was slanting in the open window since he'd made that last curve, and he started to close it up. That's how he happened to see this guy standing outside of the stop light using his thumb for all he was worth.

Mike glanced at the clock on the dash board, one a.m. Fat chance he had of grabbing a ride.

The light showed yellow for a long second and snapped to green. Mike was watching the rain drip off the battered hat of the hitch-hiker as he gunned the motor. Then he saw the crutches for the first time. The poor lug was on crutches, leaning on them heavily. The coat he wore didn't look like much either. Mike cursed the big NO RIDERS sign that hung in the windshield, hesitated and swung open the heavy door.

"C'mon, buddy, climb aboard."

The poor guy had a bad time of it, getting up into the high cab with his crutches. Mike finally had to drag him in with both hands, and when he felt the chilling dampness of the fellow's clothes and the thinness of his shoulders, he was glad he'd stopped.

They were rolling now. The hitch-hiker just said, "Thanks," and sat soaking up the heat the big motor was throwing. They rode in silence for a while.

"How far you travlin'?" Mike asked.

"Far as I can get," the other was studying the sign in the windshield. "Ain't this against the rules, fella, picking me up?"

"Rules were made to be broken," Mike grinned. He'd heard that somewhere. It sounded pretty good. He guessed maybe the boss wouldn't have thought so.

The other man laughed, but there were no bells in the laugh. It was sharp and cackling, and for some strange reason made Mike think of icicles.

Mike watched him roll down the window on his side of the cab. He did it very slowly and deliberately. Then he picked up the crutches and threw them out of the fast moving truck.

After that he laughed again and closed the window.

Mike's foot lightened on the gas unconsciously, and the truck slowed perceptibly. He growled nervous-like, "What's the big idea?" He felt suddenly disillusioned, like the first time he found out there was no Santa Claus.

"The idea," the guy's tone was nasty now, "is to keep this buggy moving fast!" He did some slight of hand tricks in his right hand coat pocket. Mike noticed that his shoulders didn't look so thin when he had that cannon in his hand. Especially since it was pointed at Mike's head.

Mike stepped on the gas.

"Rules were made to be broken," he mimicked Mike. "I'll bet that's the only thing we agree on." He was running over at the mouth with importance. "The old guy, back at the filling station, didn't need his crutches anymore. He's got a hole in his head. I get myself a ride from a nice soft head, so what good are the crutches, pal?"

Mike Devlin wasn't worrying about the crutches. There were plenty of other things... the boss and his NO RIDERS rule for instance. The boss was nuts on his rules, but hell, there were other jobs in the world if he ever got out of this mess in one piece. How about Madge and the twins? What good would he be to them with a hole in his head. This bozo was kill crazy.

"You keep your flat foot on that gas hard and constant," the gunman snapped "or they'll be having a double funeral in the country."

"They fry 'em in a hurry in this state," Mike felt the sharp pressure of the gun against his temple and wished he'd kept his mouth shut. They were hitting sixty-five when he started slowing for the S curve near Galestown, and the pressure was still notching his forehead.

"I drive, you know," the hot breath touched Mike's cheek. "Just in case you're getting tired."

Mike knew that when he stopped driving he stopped living.

"Bad curve coming up." He nursed the speeding truck around the first bend.

The blockade was ideal as to location. The copper's blockade, that is. They both saw it at the same time. It leaped toward them as they straightened out of the second curve in the S... red lamps were swinging them down from the middle of the road... just a routine check, probably stopping all the traffic.

Right through the middle!" this guy barked in Mike's ear.

Mike knew this was it. He knew the road. A deep ditch on the left, a high brick wall on the right, and coppers down the middle. He could run the middle all right, but they'd find him with a hole in his head later on. The pressure eased off his head. The guy was concentrating on cops now. It was sort of funny. The look on that one cop's face when they didn't slow down. Then Mike did three things at the same time. He heeled the big truck over hard to the right, slid his door open, and jumped. He heard the crash as the truck hit the wall. He didn't hear anything after that.

Mike was watching the twins play catch in the warm sun of the front yard when the mailman arrived. Mike accepted an envelope and the morning paper with his left hand. The right arm was still in a sling, but Mike wasn't kicking! A broken arm and a conk on the noodle were pretty cheap. Yes sir, pretty cheap! At least he still had his whole hide. Now, the other guy...

Mike opened the envelope which was the stationery of Huber's Midwest Trucking Company. He found a cheque for two weeks pay and a short terse note from the boss: "You know the rules Mike. Sorry. I hear they're hiring drivers at Wardlow's."

Great guy, the boss. Kicked you in the chin one minute and helped you to your feet the next.

Now, the other guy not so hot. Funny how that brick wall had pushed the engine back in the killer's lap. Made hash out of both his feet. They said he'd never walk again. Not that it makes much difference.

Here! Here's the whole story in the morning paper. One time in his life Mike Devlin makes the headlines and the front page. And look at this, "KILLER OF CRIPPLE WILL SPEND LIFE SENTENCE ON CRUTCHES." Mike scratched his head quizzically. You never know. (Copyright Wheeler Newspaper Syndicate)

Canada Warned To Cut Production Costs

LONDON. — Unless Canada can hold down her production costs she may "price herself" out of her essential foreign markets at a time when her expenditures in United States dollars is causing concern, R. Keith Jopson, United Kingdom trade commissioner in Montreal, said in a Board of Trade Journal.

Jopson wrote that world economic dislocations are pressing Canada heavily and that production costs are perturbing her manufacturers.

He warned Britain that Canada's "patient understanding" of Britain's export difficulties had limits. It was likely orders might begin to be cancelled unless prices were reduced and deliveries improved.

ZOO FREES COON THAT KILLED NINE SNAKES

She was freed in a swamp eight miles away after museum attendants discovered she had slipped into a snake pit and had killed nine black-snakes.

NEW AUTOMOBILE ENGINE TESTED

FRENCH LICK, Ind.—An automobile engine which uses 30 to 40 per cent. less gasoline because of a higher compression ratio was demonstrated to automotive engineers here.

Charles F. Kettering, who retired recently as vice president of General Motors Corporation, said the development of the new engine marked the beginning of a "new era in economical use for fuel."

Kettering said motors of higher compression ratio were "possible and practicable," despite a mass of technical literature to the contrary.

The engine demonstrated in an Oldsmobile here was developed in GM's research laboratories division, which Kettering headed until his retirement. Hundreds of engineers attending the second post-war summer meeting of the society of Automotive Engineers rode in the car.

Kettering said that test cars powered by the new engine have been running in Detroit and Dayton areas. He said they had proved that fuel economies from 33½ to 40 per cent. would be accomplished by the "new, smooth engine of 12½ to one compression ratio."

"So much has been written and said about our having reached the peak in fuel economies," said Kettering, "that most engineers have believed this bugaboo."

"If engineers, and our colleagues, the petroleum technologists, will continue to work together on our separate developments, we will find we can do a better job for the customer."

CAUSE OF ACCIDENTS

The Winnipeg Free Press says the great majority of automobile accidents are not caused by lack of skill, physical incapacity or handicaps of drivers, nor by failure of the car mechanism—the greatest percentage are due to ill-temper, gross bad manners, or bad judgment.

Has Had "Temporary" Jobs All Life

PITTSBURGH. — The Rev. W. W. Ritter has devoted his life to "temporary" jobs.

Once he was asked to fill-in as pastor of the Mt. Nebo United Presbyterian Church for six months, until a regular pastor could be assigned. That was 37 years ago. He's still got the job.

During the teacher shortage in World War I, Ritter was asked to substitute in the one-room Mt. Nebo school until the school board could get another schoolmaster. They never did.

"He's still 'substituting'."
